

I see no reason to change the Wisconsin No-Call law. It is there to protect citizens like myself from time wasting calls from businesses. If I decide to drop a credit card or change banks I do not want these businesses to harass me for eighteen months after the fact. Nor if I do business with one company do I want to be bothered by every other business with whom they happen to be affiliated. If I wanted to talk to those businesses, I would contact them.

It has become very nice to not have to dread answering the phone. We no longer have to turn off the phone during meals to avoid the barrage of worthless calls. Now, if the phone rings, we know it is an important or pleasant call. Do not change Wisconsin's law.
